Abstract: Research has shown that birth order, or ordinal position in the family, is related to personality and career development. The purpose of this study was to explore the relationship between birth order and career assessment. The study involved 100 college students who completed a personality inventory and a career assessment instrument. The results showed that birth order was significantly related to personality and career assessment scores. The findings suggest that birth order may be a useful variable in career assessment and counseling practice.

Assessment Rubrics for Learning

Keihin Tan and Leong Wei Shin

INTRODUCTION

Assessment may be understood as the process of forming a judgment about the quality and extent of student achievement or performance, and therefore by inference a judgment about the learning that has taken place (Sadler, 2005). Assessment practices therefore require judgments to be made concerning students' learning, and such judgments need to be made against clear descriptions of the nature and level(s) of requisite learning. Rubrics are a useful instrument for describing the expectations of students' learning in terms of standards and criteria.

CLARIFYING TYPES OF STANDARDS—A PRELUDE TO UNDERSTANDING RUBRICS

The word 'standard' is universally used yet has different meanings, depending on historical and social derivation' (Klenowski & Wyatt-Smith, 2014, p. 12).

The term 'standards' is commonly used by teachers, policy-makers and stakeholders, but may not always refer to the same thing. The key distinction to be grasped is the difference between Curriculum standards and Achievement standards.

Curriculum standards, or sometimes referred to as Content standards, articulate what is to be taught. They would therefore pitch the levels of curriculum instruction for cohorts of students, and not for individual students. Achievement standards are articulations of the levels of quality or achievement of individual students' work. They would guide students and teachers on the judgment of individual learning outcomes.

Rubrics typically refer to the articulation of levels of Achievement standards, and in this chapter all the examples of rubrics pertain to the depiction of different levels of quality of individual student work, rather than levels of curriculum and instruction for a cohort of students.

WHAT IS A RUBRIC?

'A rubric is a coherent set of criteria for students' work that includes descriptions of levels of performance quality on the criteria' (Brookhart, 2013, p. 4).

Standards and criteria are the two main elements of a rubric. Sadler (1987) offers the following definitions of criterion and standards:

Criterion (Noun)—A distinguishing property or characteristic of anything, by which its quality can be judged or estimated, or by which a decision or classification may be made.
